

Timex Ironman Global Trainer watch with GPS

Posted in Watches by Conner Flynn on January 25th, 2010

We haven't seen any interesting watches from Timex for awhile now, but check this guy out. It's the company's new GPS-on board watch. It will be arriving next month, going by the name Ironman Global Trainer. Yes it has GPS and is not fugly.

It features real-time speed, pace and distance data courtesy of the SiRFstarII module inside, and it also boasts 50 meters of water resistance, a customizable display to showing off all of the data and it can send performance reports to your PC. It's compatible with Timex heart rate and bike sensors and third-party power meters using ANT+ wireless technology. Did I mention that it looks nice?

It debuts next month, but will ship this May.

[Engadget]

